Bo The Bull Elk and J.D. Beaver are the lovable stars of the story.

In their own fun and entertaining way, and with the help of their forest friends, Bo and J.D. explain the importance of forests and what must be done to protect forests for future generations.

The issues addressed by Bo and J.D. are:

1. The importance of forests to the child's everyday life even if the child doesn't live near a forest. Children are made aware of the wood products they use everyday such as toilet paper, baseball bats, charcoal, books, etc.
2. The importance of protecting forests while meeting the demand for wood products.
3. The aesthetic value of forests as well as the wonderful recreational outlets they provide such as skiing, camping, fishing, and hiking.
4. The responsibility we all have to protect forests for future generations of people and animals.
5. The innovative measures being used to meet the demands for wood and wood products while ensuring the future health of forests.
6. The importance and the need for all of us to work together to protect the future of our forests and avoid repeating past mistakes.
